Creator History

Barbara Goldsmith was an author, journalist, and philanthropist who lived and worked in New York City and East Hampton, New York. Goldsmith was born Barbara Joan Lubin to self-made business executive Joseph Lubin and Evelyn (Cronson) Lubin, a former art teacher, in New York City on May 18, 1931. She was raised in New Rochelle, New York, where she attended public schools, graduating from New Rochelle High School. In 1953, she graduated from Wellesley College with a bachelor's degree in English and Art History.

In 1954, she began working for Women's Home Companion magazine, where she interviewed celebrities such as Clark Gable and John Huston. By the early 1960s, Goldsmith was a columnist for Town & Country magazine, writing about art and culture and profiling famous artists, architects, actors, and filmmakers. In 1968, she helped found New York magazine and in the early 1970s she was a senior editor at Harper's Bazaar.

Goldsmith's research on artists, art collectors, and museums that Goldsmith wrote for New York, Harper's, and other magazines inspired her first book, The Straw Man, a novel based on the New York art world published in 1975. Goldsmith's books and her journalistic writing overlapped frequently thereafter. Between 1980 and 2005, she wrote Little Gloria...Happy at Last (an account of the 1934 custody battle over child heiress Gloria Vanderbilt between her mother, Gloria Morgan Vanderbilt and her aunt, Gertrude Vanderbilt Whitney), Johnson v. Johnson (about the legal dispute between the heirs to the Johnson & Johnson pharmaceutical fortune), Other Powers (a book about the life of nineteenth century American suffragist, feminist, free-love advocate, journalist, presidential candidate, and spiritualist Victoria Woodhull), and Obsessive Genius (a biography of the Nobel Prize-winning French scientist, Marie Curie). These books provided cultural and social commentary in a narrative non-fiction format. A meticulous researcher, Goldsmith infused her books and articles with historical perspective. Exceptional women, wealth, fame, and the supernatural were her favored subjects.

An active philanthropist, Goldsmith donated to many charities and cultural institutions. Later in her career, she became an advocate for paper preservation and the use of acid-free paper in publishing. She funded preservation laboratories at New York Public Library and New York University Libraries. She served on numerous boards of trustees, including that of the New York Public Library. Through her work as a trustee of PEN (Poets, Essayists, and Novelists) International, Goldsmith advocated for human rights and freedom of expression around the world.

Goldsmith was married to C. Gerald Goldsmith, an investment banker with whom she had three children, from 1954 to 1969, and to Frank Perry, a film director, from 1977 to 1992. Barbara Goldsmith died on June 26, 2016 in New York City.

Scope and Content Note

The Barbara Goldsmith papers consist of the personal and professional files of American author, journalist, and philanthropist Barbara Goldsmith (1931-2016). The bulk of this collection documents Goldsmith's career as a journalist and author. In addition to the files on her writings, the collection covers Goldsmith's private life, family, education, friends, marriages, travels, and non-writing professional activities, including philanthropy, preservation advocacy, and her work with the President's Commission on the Celebration of Women in American History during the Clinton administration. File types include certificates of awards and honors; short biographies and interviews; business files; personal correspondence; diaries and date books; photographs; and personal papers.

The 31 scrapbooks provide a self-contained biography of Goldsmith's personal life, writing career, philanthropy, professional activities, and achievements. From her Sweet 16 party to the year she died, she recorded every event and milestone that she considered most important in her scrapbooks. They contain substantial and significant correspondence and photographs, as well as invitations, articles, clippings, reviews, cover art, book jackets, certificates, and other documents.

Goldsmith's correspondence documents her personal and professional life through letters, postcards, and cards she exchanged with friends, colleagues, and family members from the 1940s to the 2010s, though there is very little correspondence from the 1960s. Goldsmith's most frequent correspondents are her husbands, Gerald Goldsmith and Frank Perry; her mother, Evelyn Cronson Lubin; and her children, Alice, Andrew, and John Goldsmith. Goldsmith's courtship with her first husband, Gerald Goldsmith; her relationship with her second husband, Frank Perry; and its demise are the most extensively covered subjects in her letters. Other correspondents include prominent individuals such as Bill Clinton, Hillary Clinton, Jacques D'Amboise, Max Frankel, William T. Golden, Danny Kaye, Bernard Lewis, Joel Rosenthal, Liz Smith, and Kurt Vonnegut.

Writings include Goldsmith's articles and speeches, as well as files on her five books and other writing projects. Articles, arranged chronologically, cover Barbara Goldsmith's journalistic work dating from 1954 to 1999 and include published articles, research material, notes, drafts, and a few photographs. Topics include local community news; book reviews; travel; and culture. Magazines in which Goldsmith's articles appeared include: New York, Town & Country, Vanity Fair, Parents, Architectural Digest, Harper's Bazaar, Parade, and The New Yorker. There are also copies of many of her published articles in the scrapbooks.

Files on Goldsmith's five published books make up the largest component of this collection. These books are: The Straw Man (1975), Little Gloria...Happy at Last (1980), Johnson v. Johnson (1987), Other Powers: the Age of Suffrage, Spiritualism, and the Scandalous Victoria Woodhull (1998), and Obsessive Genius: The Inner World of Marie Curie (2005). Goldsmith's files on her books consist of research files, manuscripts, and post-publication materials. Goldsmith did extensive research for all five books, even The Straw Man, her only work of fiction, which she researched the New York art world. Research files include copies and transcripts of original documents, notes, photographs, articles, and timelines. Manuscripts include early draft excerpts inter-filed with notes, later drafts submitted to friends and publishers with annotations, and final galleys. Post-publication files include articles, reviews, flyers, interviews, blurbs, and other publicity materials; as well as book jackets, cover art mock-ups, book tour information, and publisher correspondence.

Writings 1920s-2016

Writings include Goldsmith's articles and speeches, as well as files on her five books and other writing projects.

Articles 1954-2012

Articles, arranged chronologically, cover Barbara Goldsmith's journalistic work dating from 1954 to 2012 and include original published articles, research material, notes, drafts, and a few photographs. Topics include local community news, book reviews, travel, and culture. Many articles that Goldsmith wrote for her column, "The Creative Environment" in Town & Country magazine in the mid-1960s are included. Goldsmith frequently interviewed celebrity artists, filmmakers, actors, and architects for her columns, and some transcripts from these are included. Goldsmith was one of the founding editors of New York magazine. New York's first issue from April 1968 and many of her subsequent articles for the magazine, including "La Dolce Viva," a splashy profile of actress and Andy Warhol associate, Viva, are present. "La Dolce Viva," was included in Tom Wolfe's The New Journalism anthology, first published in 1973. Files include articles Goldsmith wrote for Vanity Fair, Parents, Architectural Digest, Parade, The New Yorker, and others. Files on her work as senior editor at Harper's Bazaar in the early 1970s are also present. Article topics occasionally led to book-length treatments, as is the case with several articles on The Metropolitan Museum of Art and art curator Thomas Hoving that later informed Goldsmith's novel, The Straw Man. More frequently, Goldsmith distilled her non-fiction books down to article length after publication of the books; articles on the Vanderbilt family (Little Gloria...Happy at Last) and Marie Curie (Obsessive Genius) are examples. A two-part article on the Johnson family published in Vanity Fair preceded the publication of Johnson v. Johnson by a few months. Several articles on paper preservation coincide with Goldsmith's advocacy on this issue. There is some overlap between topics and titles of Speeches with those of Articles, as well. Correspondence with article interviewees, editors, and readers are frequently included in these files. In a few instances, follow-up correspondence filed with the article to which it relates is dated much later than the original article. Biographical sketches of Goldsmith and a few articles written by others about Goldsmith are also included. A thesis written by an undergraduate student discussing Tom Wolfe's "New Journalism" concept and Goldsmith's response to the student are also included.

Speeches 1980-2016

Goldsmith frequently gave lectures and spoke to audiences in various locations around the United States and worldwide throughout the latter half of her career. The speeches files date from 1980 to 2016 and include speech scripts; drafts; index note cards; research material; and press releases. In some cases, speech scripts are in promotion of or directly derived from her published work. Occasionally, development went the other direction, where a speech represents Goldsmith's initial efforts on a topic that later led to a longer article or book.

The Straw Man circa 1972-1976

Goldsmith's files on her debut novel, The Straw Man consist of research files, manuscript drafts, and a small amount of post-publication materials. Though The Straw Man is a work of fiction, Goldsmith conducted background research on the book's setting and subjects: the New York art world, protest art, prominent philanthropists, art collectors, museums, artists, and museum donors. Research files include working notes, copies and originals of documents such as newspaper and magazine articles, exhibition programs, wills, court transcripts, letters; and postcards. There are also several complete and incomplete manuscript drafts, many of which are annotated by Goldsmith and her editors and publishers. One folder of post-publication files contains articles and letters commenting on or responding to the book.

Little Gloria...Happy at Last! circa 1976-1979, 2008

Goldsmith's files on her 1980 book, Little Gloria...Happy at Last consist mainly of research files, but also include photographs and images, drafts, and a small amount of post publication materials. Research files, arranged alphabetically by topic, cover individuals, locations, incidents, and institutions that created the historical background for the book. The topics covered most extensively include the Vanderbilt and Whitney families, the various properties they owned, and the artistic institutions they patronized. Especially well-represented family members include Alice Gwynne Vanderbilt, Reginald Claypoole Vanderbilt, and most extensively, Gertrude Vanderbilt Whitney. There are also many files on the British Royal Family, including the Windsor and Mountbatten families; and infamous kidnappings of wealthy children during the 1920s and 1930s. Research files consist of notes; copies and excerpts from newspapers, magazines, and books; copies and transcripts of letters; timelines; and draft excerpts. Images and photographs contain unsorted prints, photocopies, and occasionally original photographs and slides, articles, and other images collected as research for the book, as well as those used in the final version of the book. Manuscripts consist of complete and incomplete drafts of Goldsmith's book and the screenplay for the television movie based on it, some of which are annotated. Post-publication materials included here are a 1998 interview with Goldsmith about the book, a few reviews, and a pilot for a 2008 series on the Vanderbilt family.

Other Powers: The Age of Suffrage, Spiritualism, and the Scandalous Victoria Woodhull* 1988-2011

Goldsmith's files on her 1998 book Other Powers: the Age of Suffrage, Spiritualism, and the Scandalous Victoria Woodhull document the process of researching, writing and publishing a significant work of non-fiction and offer a collection of background research materials on Victoria Woodhull, the social movements in which she participated, life in nineteenth century America, and the other prominent individuals with whom her life intersected. Files on Other Powers consist of research files, manuscripts, and post-publication materials.

Research Files

The research files Goldsmith created and collected during the writing of Other Powers illuminate her process of managing the information she'd gathered for such a heavily research-based book. The alphabetical and subject files show the way she organized her research notes and materials. The subjects and individuals most extensively represented are Henry Ward Beecher and other Beecher family members including his sisters Harriet Beecher Stowe and Isabella Beecher Hooker; the extramarital affair between Henry Ward Beecher and Elizabeth "Lib" Tilton and the scandal surrounding their affair; Frederick Douglass; spiritualism and mesmerism; Lib Tilton; Theodore Tilton; Women's Rights; and Woodhull, her husbands, and other family members, including her sister Tennessee Claflin. Though there are individual files on prominent feminists such as Susan B. Anthony, Anna Dickinson, Isabella Beecher Hooker, and Elizabeth Cady Stanton, the majority of materials on these and other feminists are in the extensive Women's Rights Section. There are materials on the Beecher Tilton Scandal in the Beecher Section, but most of those materials are in the more extensive Tilton section. Alphabetical Subject files contain photocopies, transcripts, and occasionally originals of documents such as letters, newspapers, articles, short biographies, speeches, wills, court proceedings, pamphlets, directories, encyclopedia extracts, and photographs. They also contain Woodhull's handwritten and typed notes and draft excerpts of chapters from the manuscript pertaining to the subject covered. Research files also include some miscellaneous notes, and documents, and images. Images include originals and photocopies of images used in the book. Image research files also include copies of sources retained for the purpose of pulling images from them, notes on what images were collected and what were still needed, as well as correspondence between Goldsmith and her research staff and libraries and archives from which images were requested or obtained. Goldsmith used the materials she collected in subject files to create a chronology in order to track the activities of the individuals who figured prominently in her narrative, as their paths weaved in and out of Woodhull's. The chronology was maintained in computer files included in this collection. The chronology created the skeleton of the sequential narrative that Goldsmith eventually expanded into the complete manuscript.

Manuscripts

The many drafts of the Other Powers manuscript demonstrate, as thoroughly as do the research files, the amount of work involved in the creation of this book. Several drafts of the complete manuscript show its development at different stages, and some contain comments from agents, editors, and publishers who reviewed the manuscript. There are also many incomplete and unsorted draft excerpts and notes. However, Goldsmith's working drafts provide the most insight into her working process. These consist of drafts, arranged by chapter, with very extensive notes and appendages, which may include text revisions, background writings, copies, and transcriptions. From her chronologies she created chapter summaries and moved on to creating chapter drafts. As she was in the process of writing, she would return to her research files and chronologies and make notes and revisions, sometimes making a copy of a document and inserting it into drafts to incorporate it into her next revision.

Obsessive Genius: The Inner World of Marie Curie 2000-2010

Between 2000 and 2004, Barbara Goldsmith worked on Obsessive Genius, a biography of the pioneering radioactivity scientist, Marie Curie. The first female recipient of a Nobel Prize, "Madame Curie," had been a childhood hero of Goldsmith's. In the 1990s a cache of Curie's archival papers that had previously been off-limits to researchers due partly to their levels of radioactivity were made accessible for the first time. Goldsmith began to pursue writing a new biography of the physicist at this time.

Research Files

Research files, which date from 2000 to 2003, demonstrate Goldsmith's thorough and wide-ranging information gathering process. This section includes files on: other influential scientists of the period including Curie's teachers, her husband, respected physicist Pierre Curie, and their children and grandchildren who also became scientists; numerous scientific theories and principles; historical events of the late 19th and early 20th centuries; photographs of Curie and illustrations relating to her work and discoveries; correspondence with interview subjects, research assistants, and publishers; and Curie's writings and Nobel lectures. Handwritten notes are plentiful throughout.

Comstock

The Comstock project was an offshoot from Other Powers, wherein Goldsmith investigated connections among 19th century Comstock obscenity laws (advanced by and named for United States Postal Inspector Anthony Comstock); the United States telecommunications deregulation act of 1996; traditions of American Puritanism; the modern Religious Right; and the burgeoning Internet. Comstock files include copious research files, notes, and fragmentary drafts. Though she wrote a few articles as a result of this research, the Comstock project did not result in a full-length book.

Somebody's Child

Somebody's Child was a biographical screenplay about Frederick Douglass slated to have an accompanying biography book, which Goldsmith worked on sporadically for ten years. The television film was never produced and the book was never published. These files hold Goldsmith's correspondence about the project with agents, television studio executives, publishers and other collaborators, as well as research material, notes, and manuscripts.
