Creator History

Robert Clifton Weaver, the first black presidential cabinet officer, served as the first Secretary of the Department of Housing and Urban Development under President Lyndon Baines Johnson. However, this represented only one of a series of important posts in federal, state and municipal governments as well as private foundations, organizations and universities held by Weaver during his long and illustrious career. As economist, public administrator, educator and author, Weaver devoted himself to the multifaceted issues of minority labor and urban problems.

In 1933, Weaver was one of a number of young men drawn to Washington by the New Deal administration, where he received a succession of assignments as adviser on minority problems to various agency administrators. He soon became the leader of "The Black Cabinet" whose efforts resulted in increased participation by and benefit to minority groups in the numerous projects and programs sponsored by the government during this period. His associates in this group included Ralph Bunche (United Nations Undersecretary General), U.S. Court of Appeals Judge William H. Hastie and N.A.A.C.P. Executive Secretary Roy Wilkins. While in the federal service, Weaver also supervised the National Survey of Negro White Collar and Skilled Workers sponsored by the Department of the Interior and served as a consultant both to the T.V.A. and to President Franklin Roosevelt's Advisory Committee on Education.

After World War II, Weaver left the federal government to teach and write on the problems of urban living. His research resulted in numerous articles as well as the following monographs: Negro Labor(1946), The Negro Ghetto(1948), and The Urban Complex(1964).

In 1961, Weaver returned to Washington when President Kennedy appointed him Director of the Housing and Home Finance Agency, which later became the Department of Housing and Urban Development (H.U.D.). There Weaver tried to stimulate a more aesthetic environment in public housing and to improve relocation policies by increasing funds available to small businessmen displaced by urban renewal. He ensured that the Housing Act of 1961 included grants for recreational and scenic areas and pushed through the controversial Section 221d3, giving non-profit corporations cut-rate mortgage loans to provide housing for displaced families of low and moderate income.

Weaver was born and raised in Washington, D.C. His father, Mortimer Grover Weaver was a U.S. postal clerk. Weaver's maternal grandfather, Dr. Robert Tanner Freeman, the first black in the United States to earn a doctoral degree in dentistry, graduated from Harvard's dental school with its first class in 1869. Both Weaver and his brother, Mortimer, attended Dunbar High School in Washington, D.C. where Weaver had his own electrical business during his senior year. Mortimer Weaver, who graduated from Williams College and Harvard University, was an assistant professor of English at Howard University at the time of his death in 1929 at the age of twenty-three.

Robert Weaver was a Distinguished Professor of Urban Affairs and Director of Urban Research Center at Hunter College. He was also a member of the New York City's Municipal Assistance Corporation, the Rent Stabilization Board, and the Conciliation and Appeals Board of New York City, and has received numerous citations and honorary degrees.

For more detailed information on Weaver's life and career, see Chronology.

Scope and Content Note

The Robert Clifton Weaver Papers, 1869, 1923-1970, document the varied career of a major figure in the field of urban affairs. The collection primarily concerns Weaver's professional activities and development from his entry into the federal service in 1933 until his return to the government under the Kennedy administration in 1961. Material prior to 1933 relates largely to the Weaver family. The documentation of Weaver's years as administrator of the U.S. Housing and Home Finance Agency and Secretary of Housing and Urban Development is less complete than that for the earlier period. The collection itself has been arranged in the following series: PERSONAL FILE, CORRESPONDENCE, WRITINGS AND SPEECHES, PRINTED MATERIAL, PHOTOGRAPHS, SCRAPBOOKS AND ALBUMS, and HONORARY DEGREES AND CERTIFICATES.

Arrangement: Collection organized into seven series; I. Personal File; II. Correspondence; III. Writings and speeches; IV. Printed Material; V. Photographs; VI. Scrapbooks and Albums; and VII. Honorary Degrees and certificates

b. 1 f. 1 r. 1 PERSONAL FILE 1869, 1925-1959

The PERSONAL FILE, 1869, 1925-1959, contains a wide variety of material on Weaver and various members of his family, arranged in chronological order. Included in this folder are Weaver's resume [1959?], his federal government service rating notices, selective service reclassification notices and book contracts as well as transcripts and recommendations for his brother, Mortimer Grover Weaver. Of particular interest is the 1869 diary of Weaver's grandfather, Robert T. Freeman, the first black in the United States to earn a doctoral degree in dentistry.

CORRESPONDENCE

CORRESPONDENCE, 1933-1960, consists of a single sequence of incoming and outgoing letters arranged alphabetically by correspondent's last name, with certain exceptions. Copies of letters neither to nor from Weaver are filed by the author's name, unless they are enclosures, in which case they have been retained with their covering letters. Within each name, the letters are filed chronologically. Memoranda and press releases of the Democratic Advisory Committee have been included with the correspondence.

The letters are substantive, describing policy development and program implementation in great detail. Weaver's letters elaborate his theories on urban development as well as the effects of economic legislation on minority groups, i.e., the Baker-Metcalf Law of 1955 prohibiting discrimination in housing built or altered with the aid of government insured mortgage loans (see Finletter, Thomas K.). Extensive correspondence with Walter White, Executive Secretary of the N.A.A.C.P. elaborates N.A.A.C.P. policy on specific issues. There is also a series of letters between Weaver and his publisher, Harcourt, Brace and Company (see Davis, Lambert).

SCRAPBOOKS AND ALBUMS

SCRAPBOOKS AND ALBUMS, 1925-1963, mainly concern particular events in which Weaver participated, ranging from college commencement exercises to visits to housing projects in the United States and Puerto Rico. The scrapbooks also contain newspaper clippings and memorabilia relating to Weaver's family, and the albums include printed material connected to the specific event covered in the album. The creation of the Department of Housing and Urban Development and the erection of the Department's new building are most fully documented in this series. The Scrapbooks and Albums have been arranged in chronological order, although material within individual scrapbooks and albums often ranges widely in date.
