Creator History

Under the guidance of Frank Peschka, Bill Murdock, and Isabelle Standwell, The Little Players produced puppet plays first in New York, later in Ohio, and received enthusiastic support from a number of prominent figures in the theatrical world. Beginning in New York City in 1959, the Little Players' puppet productions, which delved into classical material and were aimed at adults rather than children, soon established a following among actors and other entertainment professionals. Fans of the troupe included Sir John Gielgud, Ralph Richardson, Emyln Williams, Stella Adler, Ethel Merman, Libby Holman, Geraldine Fitzgerald, Aline MacMahon, and Cyril Ritchard, among others. Several of these celebrities acquired season tickets to the Little Players' shows, and corresponded with the producers. Some maintained contact even after the Little Players troupe relocated to Huron, Ohio.

Scope and Content Note

The Little Players correspondence consists of notes addressed to either Frank Peschka and Bill Murdock, or to Isabelle Standwell, written during the early 1960s when the troupe was based in New York, and later, after the Little Players had relocated to Huron, Ohio. Although most of the notes from the Little Players' famous fans are little more than succinct requests for tickets, almost all express admiration for the troupe's shows. Some of the prominent supporters, notably Ethel Merman and actress Aline MacMahon, corresponded steadily with Little Players co-producers Frank Peschka and Bill Murdock.
