Creator History

Samuel Leve (1910-1999) was a New York-based scenic designer. Originally from Russia, the Leve family immigrated to the United States in 1920. In the 1930s, Leve worked at the Mercury Theatre in New York, creating scenic designs for the productions of Julius Caesar (1937) and The Shoemaker's Holiday (1938). He also taught "Principles and Practice of Stage Design," a summer course held at the City College of New York.

Throughout his career, Leve designed for countless productions on Broadway such as Beat the Band (1942), Dark Hammock (1944), and The Story of Mary Surratt (1947); international productions at the National Theatre such as It's a Gift (1945) and Dinosaur Wharf (1951); and Metropolitan Opera House productions such as The Warrior (1947). He created scenic designs for television productions including The Fred Waring Show (1949-1953), The Ford Theatre Hour, and The Nash Airflyte Theater series; and presidential events such as birthday parties for Dwight D. Eisenhower and John F. Kennedy, and a 1971 speaking engagement for Richard M. Nixon.

Leve also worked on productions such as Let's Be Candid (1937) and The Big Blow (1938) for the Federal Theatre Project, a New Deal project established in 1935 and sponsored by the Works Progress Administration. In 1990, he was honored at George Mason University's Federal Theater Tribute Luncheon in New York.

Leve was a member of the United Scenic Artists, Local USA 829. He died in 1999 in New York City.

Scope and Content Note

The Samuel Leve design files date from the 1930s to 1994 (bulk dates 1930s-1950s) and represent his career as a New York-based scenic designer. Files are composed of designs, photographs and slides, scenic and rigging plots, course materials, correspondence, clippings, programs, and newsletters.

The bulk of the collection consists of photographs and scenic and rigging plots that demonstrate the execution of Leve's designs. Photos are from various theater and television productions such as Julius Caesar (1937), The Big Blow (1938), Dark Hammock (1944), Eleven Lives of Leo (1948), The Fred Waring Show (1949-1953), and Dinosaur Wharf (1951). There are also a series of slides from the 1958 NBC television special of Hansel and Gretel. The scenic and rigging plots are from numerous theatrical productions such as Beat the Band (1942), Clutterbuck (1949), Lace on Her Petticoat (1951); and the television series The Revlon Mirror Theater (1953). Some of the plots have multiple productions within one roll, especially episodes in The Ford Theatre Hour and The Nash Airflyte Theater series such as Little Women (1949), The School for Scandal (1950) A Double-Dyed Deceiver (1950), Portrait of Lydia (1950) and The Fiddling Fool (1951). A few of the plot rolls also contain designs.

The majority of the designs included in this collection were either framed or mounted on poster board. There is an Uncle Sam design from a 1953 birthday party for Dwight D. Eisenhower; a presentation sketch from a 1971 Richard M. Nixon speaking engagement; presentation sketches for Beat the Band (1942); a design from the Federal Theatre Project's Let's Be Candid (1937); and designs for theatrical productions such as The Story of Mary Surratt (1947). Some of Leve's designs are very artistic, elaborate, and resemble collages. Some also have values listed on the back of the frames or mounting, such as the designs for Eleven Lives of Leo (1948) and Solomon's Daughter (1957).

Materials related to Leve's 1938 summer course at City College, "Principles and Practice of Stage Design," consist of a glossary of stage terms, bibliographies, and lecture notes.

Additionally, the collection contains items concerning the Federal Theatre Project, such as a program and correspondence from the 1990 tribute luncheon at George Mason University where Leve was honored. There are also correspondence, clippings, and newsletters related to the 1992 presentation of the Federal Theatre Project archival materials, housed at George Mason University, which were adapted into new theatrical productions.

Most of Leve's work includes a United Scenic Artists, Local USA 829 stamp. Many of the photographs and designs are unidentified.

Arrangement: The collection is organized by production.
