Creator History

Joseph Mitchell (1908-1996) was a journalist and New Yorker writer. Mitchell was born on a Fairmont, North Carolina farm in 1908 to Averette Nance (A.N.) and Elizabeth Mitchell. Mitchell attended the University of North Carolina from 1925 to 1929. Although he had initially enrolled with the intention to study medicine, he did not receive a degree.

Instead Mitchell left North Carolina in 1929 and moved to New York City to write for the New York Herald Tribune and later the World-Telegram, covering crime and writing profiles. New Yorker founder Harold Ross offered Mitchell a position at the magazine in 1938 and Mitchell became known for his intimate portraits and depictions of New York City people and places including the Fulton Fish Market, McSorley's Old Ale House, and Joe Gould. Despite not publishing after his 1964 profile "Joe Gould's Secret," Mitchell remained on the staff of the New Yorker until his death.

Mitchell's journalistic interests spanned the complexities of New York City life. Mitchell wandered the city, seeking to capture what he could, in both physical and written form, of New York City's ever changing cultural and physical landscape. His profiles often focused on local oddities, eccentrics, and colorful characters, and those on the fringes of society. He was particularly drawn to Lower Manhattan and the Fulton Fish Market. According to several published accounts, Mitchell felt at home in Lower Manhattan, and specifically at the Fulton Fish Market.

Mitchell was active in several organizations and held leadership positions. The American Academy of Arts and Letters awarded Mitchell a grant in 1965, elected Mitchell to the Academy's Department of Literature in 1970, and in the 1970s Mitchell served as the organization's secretary. As the South Street Seaport transformed from an active port to a museum and historic district, Mitchell served on the South Street Seaport Museum's Advisory Council and Mayor Ed Koch appointed Mitchell to the Landmarks Preservation Commission in 1982. He was also an active member of the Gypsy Lore Society and held membership in the Century Association. Mitchell was a regular financial donor to a number of non-profit organizations.

Mitchell was married to photographer Therese Mitchell (Therese Dagney Englested Jacobson) from 1931 until her death in 1980. Together they had two daughters, Nora (Sanborn) and Elizabeth. Joseph Mitchell died on April 27, 1996 in New York City.

Scope and Content Note

The Joseph Mitchell papers (1838-2011, bulk: 1930-1996) document his career as a journalist and writer, his professional and personal relationships (including those with his journalistic subjects), and his relationship with the city itself. The collection reflects Mitchell's interests in a range of overlapping subjects, many of which related to aspects of life in New York City. In addition to his writing and research projects, Mitchell was active in several organizations, recorded meticulous notes on nearly all aspects of his life, and collected artifacts.

Mitchell's work with and membership in organizations is documented by his organizational files. The bulk of these records relate to the American Academy of Arts and Letters (from whom Mitchell received an award in 1965 and was elected as a member in 1970), the Century Association, the Gypsy Lore Society, the South Street Seaport Museum, and the Landmarks Preservation Commission.

Series V: Subject Files 1838-1996 (27 boxes, 4 volumes)

The subject files (1830s-1990s) reflect Mitchell's interests, unrealized projects, and relationships with his writing subjects. Mitchell had in his possession a significant amount of records created by others, specifically Ann Honeycutt, Jean Stafford, and Herbert I. Hall. Presumably Mitchell had these records because he intended to use them for various writing projects and research.

Ann Honeycutt

The materials related to Ann Honeycutt contain Honeycutt's records as well as Mitchell's notes about her. Honeycutt (who died in 1989) was a close friend of Mitchell's and also associated with other New Yorker writers. For a time, Honeycutt was married to New Yorker managing editor St. Clair McKelway. The records primarily relate to her personal life and indicate Mitchell received a bequest from Honeycutt's estate. Only a sample of Honeycutt's financial records have been retained.

Fulton Fish Market

A large portion of the subject files pertains to the Fulton Fish Market, Fulton Street, and the surrounding area. Of particular interest are Mitchell's notes and bills from merchants at the market; a ledger with entries related to seafood and other companies on the east coast; photographs; and correspondence with Bob and Joe Cantalupo. The Cantalupos ran the Cantalupo Carting Company which was based at the Fulton Fish Market. Joe Cantalupo (a one-time associate in the Colombo crime family) assisted Mitchell in accessing and researching the Fulton Fish Market. Some material relates to the fishing industry more generally.

The "Old House at Home" about McSorley's Old Ale House is one of Mitchell's most well-known stories. Similar to his interest in the Fulton Fish Market, Mitchell collected material about McSorley's and corresponded with those associated with the long-open bar, including the Kirwan family. This rich documentation of McSorley's includes two journals (dated 1904-1908 and 1917-1920), which were used to record the daily purchases of ale by McSorley's.

Mitchell wrote extensive notes to record his daily activities and conversations; describe the places and buildings he visited and the people he met in New York City and North Carolina; and log the travel expenses he incurred when traveling to North Carolina. Mitchell maintained his notes in two sections. One section of Mitchell's notes is arranged chronologically and the other is arranged by topic; there is some overlap in the content of both sections.

Series VII: New York City Ephemera 1899-1996 (5 boxes)

While Mitchell had focused interests in the Fulton Fish Market and the South Street Seaport, he also collected ephemera and other documents related to the city of New York. These items provide evidence of changes in the city's commercial, cultural, and physical landscape, and include restaurant menus, brochures, handouts, fliers, calendars, business cards, and sales tags used by seafood and produce businesses. These ephemeral items concern flea markets, bookstores, psychics and gypsies, and transportation.
