Title: William Smith Jr. papers

Date: 1665-1912 [bulk 1750-1793]

Size: 4.18 linear feet (6 boxes, 10 volumes)

Source: Various purchases and gifts, 1915-1938

Abstract: William Smith Jr. (1728-1793), an American Loyalist of New York and Quebec, was a prominent jurist, statesman, journalist and historian. The William Smith Jr. papers comprise the papers of William Smith Jr., 1683-1793; those of his son William Smith III (1769-1847), a Canadian government official, historian and militia officer, 1797-1848; and Smith family land and estate papers, 1665-1912. The bulk of the collection consists of William Smith Jr.’s papers pertaining to his activities as a lawyer, journalist and historian, and as a Councillor and Chief Justice in the British provinces of New York and Quebec (later Lower Canada). Papers include his correspondence and documents, writings for publication, and the diaries he kept from 1753 to 1783, known as his Historical Memoirs. Volumes documenting his law practice in New York are also present.

Access: Advance notice required.

Processing note: Compiled by Susan P. Waide, 2016 The auction house sold the papers in a topical arrangement by lot number. The Library initially retained that order, noting the lot and item numbers on documents. In 2016, the collection was reprocessed to facilitate access and digitization.

Creator History

William Smith Jr. (1728-1793), an American Loyalist of New York and Quebec, was a prominent jurist, statesman, journalist, and historian.
Smith was a member of the royal Council of the Province of New York from 1767 to 1783, and was the Province's last royal Chief Justice, from 1780 until his departure for England in December, 1783. He served as Chief Justice of the Province of Quebec (later Lower Canada) from 1786 until his death, in addition to holding other offices.

A prolific writer as well as a formidable lawyer, Smith contributed to the Whig periodicals the Independent Reflector (1752-1753) and the Occasional Reverberator (1753), which he co-founded with William Livingston and John Morin Scott. He also wrote the History of the Province of New-York, the first comprehensive history of the region, published in London in 1757. The diaries he kept throughout his adult life remain an important record of colonial and revolutionary-era politics in New York.

Smith was the eldest son of English emigrant William Smith (1697-1769), a wealthy New York City lawyer, and Mary Het of New Rochelle, New York. William Smith Sr. was appointed to the royal Council in 1753, resigning in favor of his son William in 1767, and was appointed a judge of the New York Supreme Court of Judicature in 1763.

After graduating from Yale College in 1745, William Smith Jr. trained for the law in his father's office, working with John Morin Scott (1730-1784) and William Livingston (1723-1790), later Governor of the State of New Jersey. All three were Presbyterians, politically aligned with Whig principles. Smith further cemented his ties with the Livingston family by marrying William's cousin Janet Livingston (1730-1819) in 1752.

Smith was admitted to practice before the New York Supreme Court of Judicature in 1750. He prepared two digests of the laws of New York, published in 1752 and 1762 in collaboration with William Livingston. With John Morin Scott, they were leaders in the professionalization of legal practice in New York.

New York politics in the mid-eighteenth century were shaped by the rivalry of two powerful families and their supporters: the Anglican De Lancey family, with strong ties to London and the British government, and the Livingston family, associated with dissenting Protestants of Whig principles. Both groups, however, defied easy categorization by their actions or alliances. William Smith, father and son, belonged to the Livingston group, known as the “Presbyterian Whigs.”

In the early 1750s, Smith, Livingston and Scott became known as the “New York Triumvirate,” distinguished for their use of the press to achieve political aims. Led by William Livingston, they produced weekly journals of essays called the Independent Reflector (1752-1753) and the Occasional Reverberator (1753), printed by James Parker of the New York Gazette, as well as pieces intended for the Gazette and New-York Mercury. The controversial essays commented on conditions in the Province, and argued for the separation of church and state. The Triumvirate led a movement to prevent the establishment of the College of New York (now Columbia University) as an Anglican institution, and were also founding members of the New York Society Library in 1754. William Smith Jr. continued to write for the press throughout his time in New York. Also during this period he wrote the History of the Province of New-York (1757).

William Smith Jr. was appointed to the royal Council in 1767. As a member of the upper house he was also a legislator. In 1767 and again in 1773, William Smith Jr. served as one of the Province's commissioners to settle boundary disputes between New York and Massachusetts.

Smith’s status and deep knowledge of the law made him a useful advisor to a succession of royal governors, especially Sir Henry Moore (1765-1769), James Murray, Lord Dunmore (1770-1771), and William Tryon (1771-1780). He played a similar role with British commanders General Sir Henry Clinton (1776-1782), Governor and Major General James Robertson (1780-1783), and General Sir Guy Carleton (Clinton's replacement), who arrived in New York in May 1782 to take command of British forces in North America. Chief Justice James De Lancey (1703-1760) and Cadwallader Colden (1688-1776), both Lieutenant Governors and New Yorkers, wielded power over many years in the absence of appointed royal governors.

The provincial Assembly was prorogued in May 1775; the Governor and Council remained in tenuous power. Smith and his family left for the safety of their country seat at Haverstraw in March 1776, and later that year, with Smith under parole, they moved to Livingston Manor at the invitation of Janet Smith's sister, Margaret Livingston (1738-1809). During that time, Smith wrote a continuation of his 1757 History of the Province of New-York, and maintained his diaries. Smith was finally banished to British lines after refusing to take an oath of loyalty to New York State in July 1778.

Smith arrived in Manhattan with his family in August 1778, and resumed his position on the Council, advising the British military government. He met with Lord Carlisle, head of the Peace Commission sent from Britain earlier that year. Smith was involved in unsuccessful efforts to bring Vermont into royal allegiance, beginning in 1779, and he was an advisor to Benedict Arnold after Arnold defected to the British in September 1780. Smith was made Chief Justice in the spring of 1780. New York remained under martial law, although Smith tried to restore some forms of civil order. During his time in New York, Smith actively worked against the Revolution, collecting intelligence and offering strategies for defeat of the patriots. Nevertheless, through his position, correspondence, publications, and personal influence, Smith tried to effect reconciliation between Great Britain and the Colonies, believing such a thing was possible until the very eve of the Evacuation. He envisioned a British vice-regal commonwealth of self-governed North American colonies, and saw the separation from Great Britain as a failure of both sides.

Under the Constitutional Act of 1791, the province of Quebec was split into the provinces of Upper Canada and Lower Canada. John Graves Simcoe and Alured Clarke were their respective Lieutenant-Governors, and Carleton was now Governor General. At that time, Smith became Chief Justice of Lower Canada at Quebec. He was also a member of the Executive Council, and Speaker of the Legislative Council, having previously served on the Council of Affairs for the Province of Quebec. He died December 6, 1793.

Custodial History

The Library purchased the papers from Lathrop C. Harper in 1920, made possible by donations from Lewis Cass Ledyard and George Peabody Wetmore. Volumes were purchased from Francis Edwards, 1915, and Classic Book Shop (volume 10), 1938. Harper acquired the papers at the Sotheby, Wilkinson & Hodge sale of June 2, 1919 through his agent Stevens & Stiles. The papers were the property of P.A.S. Hickey, a Smith descendant.

Scope and Content Note

The William Smith Jr. papers comprise the papers of American loyalist William Smith Jr. (1728-1793), 1683-1793; papers of his son William Smith III (1769-1847), a Canadian government official, historian and militia officer, 1797-1848; and Smith family land and estate papers, 1665-1912.

The bulk of the collection consists of William Smith Jr.’s papers: his correspondence and documents, writings for publication, his diaries, and legal volumes, 1683-1793. These pertain to Smith’s activities as a lawyer, journalist and historian, and as a Councillor and Chief Justice in the British provinces of New York and Quebec (later Upper Canada). Notable writings include essays for the periodicals Independent Reflector and Occasional Reverberator, some written in collaboration with William Livingston and John Morin Scott; the draft Continuation of Smith’s published History of the Province of New-York; and his Historical Memoirs, diaries kept from 1753 to 1783. The diaries form an important political record of colonial and revolutionary New York. Legal volumes comprise a commonplace book, a register of cases before the New York Supreme Court of Judicature, and an index rerum.

The papers of William Smith III, 1797-1848, contain personal and professional correspondence, a journal of a trip to England in 1803-1804, certificates of appointment, a checkbook, receipts, notes pertaining to Canadian history and government, and an incomplete edited proof copy of his History of Canada.

Smith family land and estate papers, 1665-1912, consist of family wills, property records, correspondence and other papers regarding the land holdings and finances of William Smith Jr. and his heirs.

The collection also contains miscellaneous documents concerning legal and land transactions in Lower Canada not directly related to the Smith family, 1788-1804, and a small amount of loose printed matter, 1767-1844.

I. William Smith Jr. papers 1683-1793

The William Smith Jr. papers comprise his correspondence and documents, 1683-1793; his writings, consisting of works chiefly intended for publication and his diaries (Historical Memoirs), 1749-1785; and three volumes pertaining to his legal practice in New York, 1740s-1760s.

Correspondence and documents 1683-1793

William Smith Jr.'s correspondence and documents chiefly relate to his professional work as an historian and lawyer, and as royal Councillor and Chief Justice in New York City and Quebec. His time in the New York countryside under parole, 1776-1778, is also represented. The collection contains only a few items written during this stay in England, pertaining to American and Canadian affairs.

Correspondence (1750s-1793, items 1-94) consists of letters and documents received by Smith, and Smith's drafts and copies of letters and memoranda sent, chiefly in his hand. Unless otherwise stated, letters are written to or from Smith, and documents are written by him. There is also original and copied correspondence between third parties.

Documents (1683-1793, items 95-234) include drafts and copies of his own professional writings as well as documents written by others. The latter were either sent to Smith, or collected or copied by him for professional or historical purposes. In his professional work, Smith often drafted material (e.g., letters, petitions and proclamations) for use or consideration by others. Pertinent notations by Smith to this effect are noted in the container list. Smith's endorsements sometimes contain brief memoranda providing further context.

Correspondence and documents are each listed in chronological order. Additional correspondence and documents are recorded or interleaved in his Historical Memoirs, found in volumes 2-8, Writings.

Smith's importance as a provincial official and influential policy advisor to a succession of British administrators is reflected in his correspondence with those officials and drafts written on their behalf, and in memoranda, written for himself or others, on the state of political and military affairs, particularly during the military occupation of New York. Smith's correspondence with revolutionary committees and New York State governor George Clinton regarding his political status, 1776-1778, and documents relating to his parole, are among the items demonstrating his political principles and rejection of the Revolutionary cause. Memoranda written by others to Smith include Peter R. Livingston's 1776 statement of principles for a New York state constitution (item 176).

Smith's adherence to the Presbyterian Church and his opposition to an Anglican establishment are evident in correspondence regarding the founding of the College of New York, charters of colleges and churches, and drafted petitions for New York counties requesting relief from financial support of the Anglican church (1750s-1760s). His personal land interests, especially in the Kayaderosseras patent in New York, are also represented.

Notable journals or minutes of meetings kept by Smith concern the New York-Massachusetts boundary commission meeting at Hartford, Connecticut, 1773, and Provincial Council meetings related to proroguing the Assembly, 1775.

His legal career is illustrated by a New York Law Society agreement signed by Smith, Livingston, Scott, and others, 1764 (item 115); pleadings in the case of Attorney General vs. Cadwallader Colden, 1770s (items 153-158); legal opinions and notes on various trials; and legislative acts and dissenting opinions drafted in New York. A few items concern legal and government affairs in New Jersey (1750s-1760s). Smith's role in the shaping of Canada's government and legal system during his tenure there, from 1786 to 1793, is notably represented in letters and drafts prepared for Lord Dorchester regarding the Canada Bill (Constitutional Act of 1791), as well as documents concerning the compatibility of English and French law, land tenure, government revenues, and other matters.

Source material for his work and historical writings includes collected original correspondence of Jacob Leisler, dated 1689 to 1690 (items 96-99); copied colonial charters and records defining provincial boundaries; and copied correspondence of Provincial agent Robert Charles (item 107).

Writings 1749-1785

Writings consist of manuscript essays, articles, letters and other items written chiefly for the New York press on contemporary affairs, 1749-1785, as well as eight folio volumes containing Smith’s diaries (known as his Historical Memoirs), draft historical works, documents copied for reference, and legal case notes, 1750s-1783.

Essays and other writings (items 235-262), 1749-1785, include essays for the Independent Reflector and the Occasional Reverberator, written by himself or with contributions from William Livingston and John Morin Scott; columns and letters for the New-York Gazette and the New-York Mercury; and other items intended for publication. Also of interest is an essay on the consequences of the American Revolution (item 262), written during his stay in England, 1785. Publication references are provided but may not be inclusive.

In his Historical Memoirs, 1753-1783, Smith recorded important conversations and events to order his own thinking and understanding of the political environment, thus illuminating his efforts to shape policy and influence individuals during tumultuous times. They are particularly rich in detail during his residence at Livingston Manor, where he remained in contact with important patriot friends and relations such as Philip Schuyler. Smith also explicitly intended the Historical Memoirs to stand as a record of the era, should he decide not to write a further installment of his 1757 History (volume 2, page 475). While some family matters are recorded, the Historical Memoirs are essentially a record of his professional and political life.

The manuscript of Smith’s History of the Province of New-York is not present in the collection and does not appear to be extant. However, the collection does include the draft Continuation of the History of the Province of New-York.

Both the Historical Memoirs and Continuation were written in seven folio volumes. The Historical Memoirs are not in close chronological order. This is because Smith often left sections of blank pages for use at a later time. In addition, he sometimes wrote memoranda for the Historical Memoirs (diary entries or drafts of entries) on separate sheets of paper. This was especially the case during the Revolutionary period, when he did not always have access to his volumes. Tables of content inserted in the volumes were typed in the early 20th century, and may not be inclusive.

Entries in the Historical Memoirs, in rough chronological order, are as follows. Loose diary entries for 1769 and 1776-1778 are bound in supplemental volume 8.

1753 October 5-1760 December 5 (volume 2)
1761 October 19-1775 August 14 (volume 4)
Note of public proceedings in Assembly, 1769 (volume 8)
1775 September 4-1777 May 4 (volume 5)
1776 February 4 (volume 8)
1777 May 5-18 (volume 2)
1777 July 17-November 15 (volume 8)
1777 November 25-1778 May 5 (volume 5)
1778 May 6-July 5 (volume 3)
1778 July 2-25 (volume 8)
1778 August 26-1780 December 21 (volume 6)
1780 December 21-1783 November 12 (volume 7)

The Continuation of the History of the Province of New-York, covering the years 1732 to 1762, appears in volumes 1 and 2, with an earlier draft of the Clarke and Clinton administrations in volume 3. Smith’s introduction to a planned history of Governor William Tryon’s administration, covering his years in North Carolina, with transcriptions from Tryon’s papers, are found in volumes 1 and 3.

Other British and colonial documents transcribed for various purposes by Smith or others are also found throughout the volumes. These include historical and contemporary sources for Smith’s History of the Province of New-York and its Continuation, and items such as colonial land patents, which would have been pertinent to Smith’s work as a lawyer, councillor, boundary commissioner, land speculator and historian.

Legal case notes on New York Supreme Court of Judicature proceedings, 1756-1759, are found in volume 5.

The volumes also contain inserted manuscript letters and notes, as well as printed matter. Most were inserted by Smith; others were inserted by the Library. Inserted manuscript items are Smith’s Historical Memoirs from 16 March 1763 to 25 July 1778, edited by William H.W. Sabine, were published in two volumes by Colburn & Tegg, 1956-1958. They were reprinted in one volume by The New York Times and Arno Press in 1969 (retaining their separate paginations), followed in 1971 by their publication of Sabine’s edition of the Historical Memoirs from 26 August 1778 to 12 November 1783 (1 volume). Together these form two volumes in their Eyewitness Accounts of the American Revolution series. Sabine’s work omits entries from October 5, 1753 through a narrative of events in early 1763 (see volumes 2 and 3 in Smith’s papers); his work begins with the entry dated 1763 March 16. Sabine believed Smith’s rewritten coverage of that period in his Continuation to be sufficient, as stated in his introduction:

v. 9 Miscellania A approximately 1752-1764

Smith's legal commonplace book contains original writings guiding his own legal practice: copies of agreements and protocols among lawyers practicing before the New York Supreme Court of Judicature; and copies or abstracts of legal works, acts, ordinances and instructions pertaining to the practice of law in Britain and America. Writings notably include: “A scheme for drawing out bills of costs in the Supream [sic] Court of New York, digested into tables,” with similar tables for the Inferior Court; a “Promptuary,” listing seventeen steps to manage his case work before the Court; and “Some Directions relating to the Study of Law,” known to be his father's syllabus. Among the copies (of documents dating as early as 1684) are instructions for preparing letters of marque, 1756, and instructions to Smith and others as Commissioners to depose New York witnesses in a case before the High Court of Chancery in England, 1764.

v. 10 New York Supreme Court Register A 1750-1758

Smith's register of his cases before the New York Supreme Court of Judicature (pages 1-359 with name index), noting case names, transactions and fees. Cases were initiated during the court terms of October 1750-October 1758, with related transactional notes dating to approximately 1770. Entries sometimes contain the signatures of parties involved. Also present are related documents (attached and loose) including bills of costs, receipts, memoranda from attorneys and clients, and summonses, as well as a servant's indenture (page 165). Documents contain the page number of the related case entry.

II. William Smith III papers 1797-1848

William Smith III (1769-1847), of New York and Quebec, was the son of William Smith Jr. (1728-1793) and Janet Livingston Smith (1730-1819). He was a Canadian provincial government official, historian and militia officer.

William Smith left New York during the British evacuation in late 1783, and resided in London with his father until their departure for the Province of Quebec in 1786. The start of his career in government at Quebec (Lower Canada from 1791) benefitted from his father's position and influence, and the patronage of Lord Dorchester. In Canada he was known as William Smith Jr. during that time.

In 1803, Smith traveled to England to further his career and improve his finances, returning to Lower Canada in 1804. While in England he met and married Susanna Webber (called Susan; died 1850). She was the niece of his father's friend, the wealthy merchant Sir Brook Watson. He also renewed his family's acquaintance with Prince Edward Augustus, Duke of Kent.

Smith was a Master of Chancery, Clerk of the Legislative Council, and chairman of the Executive Council in the provincial government of Lower Canada. As a multiple office holder nearing retirement, he negotiated the relinquishment of positions required by British colonial reforms that culminated in the consolidation of Upper and Lower Canada in 1841. In addition to his work in government, Smith served as an officer in the Quebec militia for many years.

Smith emulated his father's work as an historian, writing the History of Canada from its first discovery to the year 1791. It was printed in two volumes in 1815, but he delayed its publication until 1826 for political reasons. Smith also edited his father's manuscript Continuation of his History of the Province of New-York (1757), published in 1826 as Continuation of the History of New-York by the New-York Historical Society, followed by their revised edition.

During his father's lifetime Smith gradually took on responsibility for the family's landholdings in New York State and Vermont, and later managed his parents' legal estate, aided by his brother-in-law Jonathan Sewell (1769-1839), Chief Justice of Lower Canada.

The papers of William Smith III, 1797-1848, contain personal and professional correspondence, a journal of a trip to England in 1803-1804, certificates of appointment, a checkbook, receipts, notes pertaining to Canadian history and government, and an incomplete edited proof copy of his History of Canada. Smith's correspondence contains personal letters from Prince Edward Augustus, Duke of Kent, and letters from British officials concerning his provincial offices and efforts to obtain a pension. Also present are a few letters to his wife Susan written by others, and papers relating to the estate of William Osgoode. Smith's correspondence and accounts concerning the family's property are found in Series III, Smith family land and estate papers.

III. Smith family land and estate papers 1665-1912

In 1752 William Smith Jr. married Jennet (called Janet) Livingston (1730-1819). She was the daughter of James Livingston (1701-1763) and Maria Kierstede (1704-1762), and the granddaughter of Robert Livingston (1663-1725; "The Nephew" of the first Lord of Livingston Manor). Janet's sister Margaret (1738-1809) married Peter R. Livingston (1737-1794), residing at "The Hermitage" at Livingston Manor. He was the son of Robert Livingston (1708-1790) the third manor lord. William and Janet Smith had ten children, of whom five survived to adulthood.

Smith's wealth was invested heavily in land holdings in New York and Vermont. Unlike most Loyalists, his lands were not confiscated, and in 1790 the State of New York granted him permission to return to resolve real estate matters, a step taken by his son William. Although Smith never returned to the United States, he and his family continued to benefit from the holdings well into the 19th century.

William Smith Jr. left his estate to his wife Janet and their children: William (1769-1847), who married Susan Webber; Jennet (called Janet, 1753-1828) who married British Army officer John Plenderleath; Mary (born 1759), who married British Army officer William Doyle of Waterford, Ireland; and Henrietta (called Harriet; 1776-1849), who married Jonathan Sewell (1766-1839) of Quebec. Elizabeth (1757-1776) died at Haverstraw.

Their daughters were Emily Ann (born 1806), Louisa Janet (born 1808), and Caroline Susanna (born 1814). Emily married Reverend George Mackie, Louisa married her cousin Robert Shore Milnes Sewell, and Caroline married Henry Stuart. Louisa and Robert Sewell had two daughters, Emily (1831-1893) and Constance (born 1833).

Smith family land and estate papers, dated 1665 to 1912, consist of family wills, property records, correspondence and other papers regarding the land holdings and finances of William Smith Jr. and his heirs. Papers include the wills of Smith and Livingston family members; land conveyances and powers of attorney, the bulk concerning the New York land holdings of William Smith Jr. and his heirs; accounts for Vermont lands; and correspondence between William Smith III and agents for New York lands, with accounts. Also included are deeds documenting the ownership of land acquired by relative Jonathan Sewell in Quebec, chiefly in French; and papers of John Hodgson and Percy A.S. Hickey concerning Smith family estate matters and genealogy.
