Creator History

Arthur Russell (1951-1992) was a multi-genre singer-songwriter, musician, and producer associated with the avant-garde music scene in New York City throughout the 1970s and 1980s. His instrument of choice was the cello, which he began playing as a child in Oskaloosa, Iowa. His music has been described as new wave, folk, disco, and experimental.

Russell left home in 1967 before completing high school to study North Indian classical music in San Francisco, California at the Ali Akbar Khan School of Music. It was in San Francisco that Russell first met and began collaborating with Allen Ginsberg. In 1973, Russell and Ginsberg united once more after Russell relocated to New York City's East Village after being accepted into the Manhattan School of Music (MSM). Ginsberg's later work, First Blues: Rags, Ballads & Harmonium Songs 1971-1974, contains music transcribed by Russell. Russell only briefly studied at MSM, eventually transferring to Dartmouth College. Though he discontinued his studies shortly thereafter, it was during this time that Russell met musicians Christian Wolff and Rhys Chatham, whom Russell succeeded as director of the avant-garde performance space, The Kitchen, in 1974. Russell's directorship, which lasted just over one year, was marked by his promotion of lesser-known, minimalist bands, such as The Modern Lovers and Talking Heads.

Russell's performances were primarily solo concerts. He carried out several shows at the Kitchen and Experimental Intermedia Foundation; as well as Sobossek's Bar, Jolly Munk, Dock's, Roulette, the Mudd Club, and night clubs and bars. Throughout his career, Russell collaborated with many musicians on minimalist instrumental, pop, and experimental disco projects. From 1975 to 1979, he performed with the Flying Hearts, a band consisting of him and several rotating musicians, including Ernie Brooks, Larry Saltzman, Joyce Bowden, Jesse Chamberlain, David Van Tieghem, Jerry Harrison, David Byrne, Jon Gibson, and Peter Zummo. In 1977, Russell recorded "Ballad of the Lights" with Allen Ginsberg as part of the Flying Hearts. The band Dinosaur L. (or Dinosaur) consisted of Russell, Byrne, Zummo, Henry Flynt, Wilbur Bascomb, and Alan Schwartzberg. Their 1977 hit "Kiss Me Again" (composed and produced by Russell) was one of Sire Records' earliest disco releases. Several of these individuals worked with Russell on Instrumentals, a lengthy orchestral work created in the mid-1970s that was released as an album in 1984. In 1980, Russell, DJ Steve A'Quisto, and Steven Hall formed the band Loose Joints. Singles included "Pop Your Funk" and "Is It All Over My Face." The Necessaries was yet another collaborative effort between Russell, Zummo, and Chamberlain. Together they produced one album Big Sky (later renamed Event Horizon), in 1981. That same year, Russell and businessman Will Socolov founded Sleeping Bag Records. Through Sleeping Bag, Russell created and produced the album 24 --> 24, and singles "Wax the Van," "Go Bang!" (Dinosaur L.), and "School Bell/Treehouse" (with Peter Zummo). Russell and Socolov parted ways around 1987.

In 1976, Russell played music composed for him by Philip Glass in the Mabou Mines production of Samuel Beckett's Cascando. Glass later introduced Russell to theatrical director and playwright Robert Wilson, who commissioned Russell to compose music for his production of Medea. Although Wilson abandoned Russell's compositions in favor of English composer Gavin Bryers, the music was eventually incorporated into an album, Tower of Meaning, in 1983 (Chatham Square). World of Echo, Russell's only full length, solo album, was recorded and released in 1986.

Scope and Content Note
The Arthur Russell collection dates from 1960 to 2005 (bulk 1974-1991) and contains writings, music, photographs, correspondence, articles, flyers, and posters. The vast majority of the collection consists of over 1,000 original sound and video recordings, which are unavailable pending digitization. The recordings date from the 1970s to the 1990s and consist of test pressings, studio versions, masters, and home recordings covering Russell's entire career. The paper portion of the collection is strong in its documentation of Russell's creative output, particularly through drafts, sketches, and full scores of his music.

Music files comprise the bulk of the papers and contain written music, lyrics, poetry, and notes. Written music consists primarily of manuscripts in the form of musical sketches; chord changes; complete scores; draft and partial compositions; and musical staves and chords that Russell clipped into smaller pieces. Printed music and annotated photocopies are also present. Notes consist of interior monologues and other creative explorations relating to Russell's work, as well as snippets of ideas and song lists.

Untitled, unsorted, and (largely) undated music precedes alphabetically arranged, titled files that were created by Russell. The unsorted music consists of writings, musical drafts, and sketches for a multitude of songs; song titles, when present or identified, are noted in the container list. Researchers should note that drafts or versions of a particular work may be scattered throughout these and the titled files, which contain materials pertaining to specific projects or songs. Materials used and created by Russell while he studied music in San Francisco are filed under "binders;" these and the composition notebooks contain a substantial amount of music documenting Russell's creative development. Several drafts and chord sheets created by Russell for Robert Wilson's Medea are present.

In addition to the music files are articles; correspondence; photographs; printed matter; biographical files; and materials relating to various record labels, such as invoices, letters, and recording schedules for Sire Records and West End Records. Two harmonicas that belonged to Russell are also present. Files for Loose Joints contain fliers, contracts, and photographs. Incoming letters comprise the bulk of the correspondence. Primary correspondents are Russell's parents, Emily and Chuck Russell; and friends Muriel Fuji, Yuko Nonomura, Kathleen Cooney, Alan Abrams, and Johanna (Jonni) Sue Bartel. Among the undated letters are notes from Allen Ginsberg and Tom Waits, and a poem from Jill Kroesen. Some letters are accompanied by music, such as a 1974 letter from Christian Wolff to Russell with a copy of "For 1, 2, or 3 People," and a 1975 letter to Russell from Cornelius Cardew, accompanied by a manuscript for his "Revolution is the Main Trend." The majority of the unsent or draft letters are to Steven Hall.

Printed material consists of programs, announcements, and flyers for performances by Russell and his peers. They advertise shows at the Anchorage, Dock's, Roulette, Jolly Munk, Sobossek's Bar, and Experimental Intermedia Foundation. Photographs consist of candid and posed shots of Russell, as well as a small amount of performance photographs. Most of the slides depict flowers and landscapes. Yuko Nonomura photographed the majority of the clouds pictured in the slides.

Arrangement: The collection is arranged alphabetically by subject or format.
