Creator History

Anne Nichols (1891-1966) was an American playwright. Throughout her career she wrote several plays, but she was best known for her successful comedy Abie's Irish Rose. The comedy opened on Broadway in 1922 and ran until 1927 with over 2300 performances. It later inspired two film adaptations and a radio series. The stage production of Abie's Irish Rose saw a resurgence in the 1940s.

Scope and Content Note

The Anne Nichols papers, Additions date from 1925 to 1955 (bulk dates 1940s-1955) and contain clippings, photographs, programs, writings, letters, sheet music, and recordings.

The bulk of the collection relates to the 1944 resurgence of Nichols' play Abie's Irish Rose during its 22nd anniversary. The programs, photographs, and clippings document the numerous productions across the country in cities such as Los Angeles, Detroit, Chicago, Boston, and New York City.

The collection also reflects Nichols' interest in writing both a musical and an autobiography. Materials related to the development of a musical include a copy of "It's the Little Things that Count" written by Nichols and Adelaide Matthews. This verse is accompanied by a draft of sheet music. Other sheet music and verses in the collection appear to be reference materials. The recordings were also used for research and include well-known compositions such as Homage to Rameau by French composer Claude Debussy, music by Louise Lyon, and experimentation with sound.

The autobiographical project is represented through typewritten recollections about Nichols' childhood, her introduction to New York City theater, the development of her early work, and the reception of Abie's Irish Rose. The manuscript drafts communicate Nichols' desire to publish this project through the organization of her recollections with accompanying chapter notes, page numbers, and edits.

Additionally, the collection includes letters that pertain to personal matters and the development of a few plays.

Arrangement: The collection is arranged alphabetically by subject or format.
