Biographical note

Author and illustrator Clarence Day was best known for writing Life With Father, a collection of stories chronicling his memories of his parents. Day was born in New York City on November 18, 1874, the eldest son of Clarence Day, Sr., a successful stock broker, and Lavinia Stockwell Day, a native of Painesville, Ohio. His grandfather was Benjamin H. Day (1810-1889), a printer and journalist who founded the New York Sun. Clarence Day was educated at Columbia Grammar School in Manhattan, St. Paul's School in New Hampshire, and Yale College, where he received a B.A. degree in 1896. After graduating, Day lived in New York City and worked in his father's brokerage house. In his spare hours, he socialized with fellow Yale alumni and volunteered as a canvasser for the Citizens Union, a civic association which opposed Tammany Hall in the 1897 mayoral election.

In the spring of 1898, Day left Wall Street and joined the U. S. Navy, then mobilizing its forces for the Spanish-American War. He served as paymaster aboard the Nahant, a Civil War-era monitor that stayed close to New York harbor throughout the conflict. During his military service, Day suffered the first symptoms of rheumatoid arthritis, a chronic disease marked by inflammation of the joints, stiffness and severe pain. He spent much of the next decade travelling in the western United States, hoping that a dry climate, together with the medical treatments he took at spas visited along the way, would cure him. Day read widely and corresponded with friends and family including his sister-in-law Wilhelmine Johnson Day; his cousin Julia Stockwell; the poet Alice Duer Miller; and Yale sociologist Albert G. Keller. Many of his letters and postcards were illustrated with humorous sketches done in the same casual style as the drawings and cartoons he would later publish in magazines, newspapers and books. Day's physical condition steadily worsened, and he eventually chose to settle permanently in New York City, where he treated his illness primarily with massage and bed rest. For many years he lived in the home of his parents on East 68th Street, but later moved into his own Manhattan apartment.

During the early 1900s, Clarence Day was active in the alumni affairs of Yale University. For several years, he owned the Yale Alumni Weekly, and served as an adviser to the magazine's editor, Edwin Oviatt. In 1908, he helped his brother George, who was about to begin a long career as treasurer of Yale, to establish the Yale University Press. Clarence Day also served several terms as secretary of his graduating class. In this position, he corresponded with 1896 alumni and compiled several editions of a "Class Book" that reported on their activities. The short biographical portraits of his classmates that he wrote for the 1915 edition, known as The '96 Half-way Book, were widely admired. Day's extensive correspondence and literary work on behalf of his alma mater gave him a great deal of satisfaction, and also led him to discover his vocation as an author. During the early 1910s, he began to compose short poems and stories and to draw cartoons that he submitted to popular magazines and newspapers. Metropolitan and Harper's Weekly were among the first to print his work. In addition, several of his cartoons and verses in support of voting rights for women appeared in pro-suffrage publications. By the end of the decade, Clarence Day was an established literary professional with numerous publication credits and a regular column in the mass-circulation magazine Metropolitan. His first book, This Simian World, was published by Alfred A. Knopf, Inc. in 1920. This wry commentary on the sociological consequences of mankind's evolution from apes received positive reviews, though its sales were modest.

As his literary career took shape, Clarence Day settled into a daily routine that he followed, with little variation, for the rest of his life. It was his habit to sleep during the morning and early afternoon hours, and to receive visitors in the evening or at night. Whether entertaining family, friends or new acquaintances, Day was an informal host who rarely wore more than a crepe dressing gown. He saw visitors in the bedroom which also served as his office, surrounded by his books, letters, manuscripts and drawings. By most accounts, Day was highly charismatic and an inquisitive, sophisticated conversationalist. He worked in the late night hours from his bed. To ease the pain of his arthritis he usually wrote or drew with his hand suspended over the pad by a trolley and sling. Day read dozens of newspapers and periodicals and maintained extensive clipping and subject files. He conducted a wide-ranging correspondence with writers, artists and intellectuals including Henry Canby, Francis

Hackett, Troy Kinney, Rose Wilder Lane, Sonya Levien, Philip Littell, Elsie Clews Parsons, Signe Toksvig, E. B. White and Katharine White.

In addition to his literary work, Clarence Day devoted much time to business and family affairs. He owned and managed a large stock portfolio, and over the years ran several businesses in collaboration with his brother Julian, who had settled in England. He also oversaw the financial affairs of his brother Harold, who suffered from traumatic epilepsy as the result of a childhood accident. Clarence, George and Julian Day settled the estates left to them by Clarence Day, Sr. (d.1927) and Lavinia Day (d.1929). In 1922, Day met Katharine Dodge, a young art librarian who worked for him briefly as a secretary. Their relationship soon developed into a romance, and they were married in 1928. A daughter, Wilhelmine (Wendy) Day, was born in 1931.

By that time, Clarence Day had achieved notable success as a writer and illustrator. He was widely admired for his subtle observations of modern civilization and human nature, and his ability to render them in clear, comic prose. His essays, book reviews, short stories, verses and cartoons appeared in Harper's Magazine, The New Republic, Ladies Home Journal, Metropolitan, The New York American, and The New Yorker. Day's second book, The Crow's Nest (1921), was a collection of essays and stories drawn from his early magazine and newspaper work. Thoughts Without Words, a book of satiric drawings accompanied by short poems, appeared in 1928. But Day achieved his greatest popularity in the 1930s with the publication of a series of comic memoirs of family life centered on the character of Father, based on Clarence Day, Sr. His first volume on the subject, God and My Father, appeared in 1932 and was followed by several stories in The New Yorker. These were collected and published by Alfred A. Knopf, Inc. as Life With Father (1935), an instant best-seller and Day's most enduring work. In the book, Father appears as an assertive, supremely confident Victorian confounded by modern social relations, mechanical devices and urban rhythms. Day renders Father's straightforward, blustery approach to complex problems with a clear prose noted by contemporaries for its sly irony and touching nostalgia.

Clarence Day died of pneumonia on December 28, 1935. Katharine Day collected and published a posthumous volume of family stories, Life With Mother (1937). She also oversaw the publication of After All (1936), a revised and expanded edition of The Crow's Nest, and was involved with stage, screen and television adaptations of Life With Father.

Scope and content note

The Clarence Day Papers document the literary career, business activity, personal life and family background of the popular author and illustrator. The date span of the papers is 1796-1993, with the bulk of the material being from the period 1890-1953. The collection includes personal and professional correspondence; notebooks, manuscripts, typescripts, galley proofs and publication tearsheets; business and financial records; family papers; news clippings and literary reference files; drawings, photographs and artifacts. There is extensive material regarding his work as a Yale alumnus, including his publication of the Yale Alumni Weekly, addressing many of the issues facing Yale in the early 1900s. The Clarence Day Papers are an important resource for the study of American magazine literature during the 1910s-1930s, and provide essential background information regarding Day's most popular and enduring work, Life With Father. In addition to Clarence Day's own material on Life With Father, the collection follows the property through its posthumous incarnations as a tremendously successful play, motion picture and television series.

Four subseries: A. Day Family Chronological Files; B. Clarence Day Alphabetical Files; C. George Day; D. Katharine Day.

I. A. Day family chronological files

The letters and postcards contained in this subseries paint a vivid picture of domestic life and personal relations in the Day family over a period of nearly seven decades. The primary focus of this material is on family affairs during Clarence Day's youth and early adulthood. Highlights include an 1874 letter from Clarence Day, Sr. announcing the birth of his first son, items written by Clarence Day while he was a student at Yale University and his letters to relatives during his service in the U. S. Navy. Additional correspondence documents the early stages of Clarence Day's arthritis and his travels in search of a cure, his close relations with his sister-in-law, Wilhelmine Day and his cousin, Julia Stockwell, and the epilepsy that afflicted his youngest brother, Harold. Letters home from school-age brothers George and Harold illustrate the friendly, earnest tone of family relations among the Days. Also filed here are 1862 letters from Clarence Day, Sr. to his family regarding his military service in the 7th Regiment of the New York State Militia, and correspondence from Julian Day regarding his distinguished service in the British armed forces during the First World War. The material is arranged chronologically, then alphabetically by author (or recipient where noted) within each year.

I. D. Katharine Day files

The primary focus of this subseries is on the personal and business affairs of Katharine Day after the death of her husband in 1935. Included are condolence letters on the death of Clarence Day, information on the posthumous publication of his writings, correspondence relating to stage and screen adaptations of Life With Father, notably with producer Oscar Serlin and authors Howard Lindsay and Russell Crouse, and correspondence with attorney Basil N. Bass regarding the settling of Clarence Day's estate. There are also childhood letters of Wendy Day, the author's daughter, and material that documents Katharine Day's continuing relations with the Day family. A few items pre-date the death of Clarence Day, including letters and postcards from Katharine Day's mother, Etta Dodge. Researchers should note that Katharine Day's spelling of her first name changed over the years. Early school papers record the spelling as "Katherine" and this is how she signed herself through the early 1920s. Around 1928 she began to use "Katharine." Her name appears with this spelling on legal and financial documents from the 1930s forward, and this is the form used throughout this finding aid.

Series II. Family papers, 1804-1983

46 boxes

Eight subseries: A. Clarence Day, Sr.; B. George Day; C. Harold Day; D. Julian Day; E. Katharine Day; F. Lavinia Day; G. Wilhelmine Day; H. Miscellaneous.

Papers filed here document the education, careers, legal affairs and personal lives of several members of the Day family. The various subseries include such materials as account books, business correspondence, diaries, estate papers, expense receipts, financial records, genealogical notes, legal records, news clippings, notebooks, obituaries, passports, real estate documents, school and college records and wills. The Katharine Day papers are of particular note, as they contain extensive material about the creation of various adaptations of Life With Father.

III. A. Biographical material and juvenilia

Filed here are notebooks, obituaries, school records and other miscellaneous papers that document Clarence Day's childhood interests and activities, and illuminate aspects of his later personal and professional life. Of particular interest are numerous short essays written by Day while he was a student at Columbia Grammar School and St. Paul's School, and an 1888 sketchbook containing drawings by Day and his father. Additional files document Day's childhood stamp collecting, his activities on behalf of the Citizens Union and his enrollment in a correspondence course in cartooning.

III. C. Yale University

Papers filed here relate to Clarence Day's undergraduate education at Yale from 1892-1896, and his subsequent activities on behalf of his alma mater. Included are examination papers, essays, notebooks and the class history address delivered by Day at the 1896 Yale commencement ceremony. Day's involvement in alumni affairs is documented by correspondence, memos and printed material pertaining to his ownership and editorial interest in the Yale Alumni Weekly and the founding of the Yale Publishing Association and Yale University Press. Letters and notes exchanged between Clarence Day and Yale Alumni Weekly editor Edwin Oviatt, in which the two friends discuss Day's earliest writings, are of particular interest. In the course of their correspondence, they also discussed and debated a number of school-related controversies. Also filed here are materials pertaining to Day's long service as Secretary of the Class of 1896, and his preparation of several publications that reported on the activities of his former classmates. Material in this subseries is complemented by correspondence with members of the Yale class of 1896 filed in Subseries IB.

Series IV. Reference and clipping files, 1833-1930s

18 boxes

These alphabetically arranged subject files contain news clippings, lists of books, notes, printed material, publication tearsheets, typescripts of the writings of other authors and a few pieces of correspondence. These items, many annotated, document Clarence Day's wide-ranging interests, his research methods, his broad reading and his support for fellow writers. The files provide an interesting cross-section of the literary production of Day's wide circle of friends and offer a glimpse of Day's thinking on subjects ranging from advertising and money to marriage and religion.

Two subseries: A. Drawings; B. Writings.

V. A. Drawings

Filed here are drawings, sketches and cartoons by Clarence Day including loose sheets, printed book covers, publication tearsheets and printer's blocks. Among the earliest items are cartoons in support of voting rights for women that appeared in pro-suffrage publications during the 1910s. Also included are sketches, drawings and tearsheets of the many small illustrations that appeared in the margins of Day's column in the magazine, Metropolitan. This material is complemented by one folder of news clippings and reviews regarding Day's work as a cartoonist and illustrator.

V. B. Writings

This subseries contains notes, manuscripts, typescripts, galley proofs, publication tearsheets and reviews of the writings of Clarence Day. Much of this material is undated, though virtually all of Day's literary production took place during the years 1910-1935. Highlights include tearsheets of Day's earliest published verses, cartoons and stories, typescripts and galley proofs of his first book, This Simian World, and the heavily-edited and annotated tearsheets of numerous Metropolitan magazine columns that Day used to compose The Crow's Nest. Included here is Day's own copy of the first edition of The Crow's Nest, with his annotations and revisions for a second edition. Perhaps most important are hundreds of pages of notes, manuscripts, typescripts, and tearsheets of Clarence Day's Father stories, as well as typescripts and galley proofs of the Alfred A. Knopf, Inc. edition of Life With Father. The wide range of Father material included here provides important insights into the composition of Clarence Day's most popular work, and documents the evolution of his style during the 1920s and 1930s as he struggled to achieve greater clarity and concision. Also filed here are galley proofs of posthumous collections of writings compiled by Katharine Day, and galley proofs of Howard Lindsay and Russell Crouse's stage adaptation of Life With Father, as well as motion picture and television scripts based on the characters.
