Description William Conant Church (August 11, 1836-May 23, 1917), editor, born in Rochester, New York, was the son of Pharcellus Church and Chara Emily (Conant) Church. He became a member of the joint military-naval expedition under General W.T. Sherman during the Civil War. In 1863, after a two year military career, he resigned in order to start a military paper, together with his brother Francis P. Church, entitled the Army and Navy Journal. This journal survived under various names until 1926. The same year the journal was started he married Mary Elizabeth Metcalf. In 1866 The Galaxy was started by the two brothers. This literary magazine was born of a discontent with the Atlantic Monthly and the feeling that New York ought to have a monthly of its own. Sheldon and Company became publishers of the magazine at the end of its second year and until 1878 when the magazine merged with the Atlantic Monthly. Church became involved in a number of New York societies and clubs and at the time of his death he was ranked, according to a New York Times statement, among the foremost journalists of the country.

The papers include correspondence of both magazines. The bulk of the Army & Navy Journal are dated 1863-1864; whereas the bulk of The Galaxy are 1866-1878. Those correspondence of the Army & Navy Journal include letters written to Church from contributors, subscribers, sales agents, officials of government departments, and newspaper correspondents. The majority of these letters relate to the military establishment of the U.S. Some contain information on certain Civil War battles and army personnel. The Galaxy correspondence mainly consist of some 1,000 letters representing 300 British and American contributors of the magazine. Among these are Horatio Alger Jr., Eugene Benson, Emma Lazarus, Rebecca Davis, Annie Edwards, Helen Hunt Jackson, Oliver Wendell Holmes, and Walt Whitman. Charles Reade and Henry James constitute two of the more frequent correspondents. Henry James submitted an article nearly every month and his letters contain his thoughts concerning some of these. William Conant Church. Papers.
Accession Sheet (con't.)

The Charles Reade folder contains incoming and outgoing letters; some of these concern a copyright/publishing problem of the novel Foul Play. To study these letters is to obtain a good sense of many of the problems and situations some of these journalists faced when they submitted articles, short stories, and criticisms. Included in these papers are the actual records maintained by Sheldon & Co. which depict a marked decrease in magazine sales between the years 1869 and 1877.
