Description Isaac Myer (1836-1902) was an attorney and author born in Philadelphia, who practiced law and wrote in both New York City and Philadelphia. In addition to his legal career, Myer was an amateur historian, orientalist, and active freemason. His literary fields of endeavor focused on United States constitutional history, federalism, and mystical and antiquarian subjects. A man of some personal wealth, he was publisher of the majority of his own works.

The Isaac Myer Papers are a collection of manuscripts of published works, as well as translations, transcriptions, commentaries, bibliographies, and indexes relating to Myer's research and writings on the Kabbalah, and biblical history, as well as several manuscripts pertaining to federalism and constitutional history. Myer investigated many aspects of the Kabbalah and the history of Jewish Mysticism, but his main focus and the bulk of his papers relate to the speculative rather than doctrinal aspects of the Kabbalah. His research centered on the Zohar, a Kabbalistic work originating in Spain in the late 13th Century, the Sepher Yezirah, or "Book of Creation", dating from the 9th century, and later, Christian commentators on the Kabbalah including J. Munk, and Knorr von Rosenroth, author of Kabbalah Denudatae, or the Kabbalah Unveiled. These later commentaries focused on the relationship of the Kabbalah to Christian doctrine, and the relationship of Christian Gnosticism to the Kabbalah. Myer's own books include: The Kabbalah: The Philosophy Of Ibn Gebriol, ON Dreams by Sysesius, Scarabs, The Oldest Book in the World, Taken from the Papyri and Monuments.
