Biographical Note

Arthur Tracy was born Abba Trascovutsky in Kamenetz-Podolsk in Moldavia on June 25, 1899. His family escaped the pogroms and moved to the United States in 1906. Tracy grew up as one of seven siblings in Philadelphia. As a child, he showed that he had a talent for singing and began singing in public. He considered being an architect, and even began his studies at the University of Pennsylvania; but decided he did not want to spend the necessary years as an apprentice before he succeeded and chose to drop out to focus on his singing. Tracy considered Caruso his idol and ultimately studied at the Curtis Institute. He sang at weddings and parties and then graduated to vaudeville and Yiddish theaters. He toured in Blossom Time and The Student Prince. After the 1929 stock crisis he worked in nightclubs, variety, even sang black face Mammy songs. He eventually considered his voice a “bari-tenor.”

William S. Paley offered Tracy a fifteen minute CBS radio program. Not wanting to embarrass his family if he failed, Tracy chose to remain anonymous. He was going to bill himself as the Vagabond Singer, but realized that Rudy Vallee was known as the Vagabond Lover. He also considered calling himself the International Balladeer. By chance, he read about a Frederick Lonsdale play called The Street Singer and chose to utilize that name as his identity. The Street Singer debuted on radio in 1931 and quickly won over audiences. After five months, his identify as Arthur Tracy was revealed. Tracy’s repertoire included Viennese operetta, love songs, pop songs, and cowboy songs as well as songs in several languages. His theme song was Marta (Rambling Rose of the Wildwood) by Moises Simons. Tracy appeared in the 1932 film, The Big Broadcast, with Bing Crosby and Kate Smith. He was not a success in American film and instead continued his singing career.

In 1935 he went to England for a seven week tour and ultimately stayed for four years. In England he found immense popularity which resulted in him being offered film roles. From 1936 to 1938 he starred in the films Limelight with Anna Neagle, Command Performance with Lilli Palmer, The Street Singer with Margaret Lockwood, and Follow Your Star with Belle Chrystall. In 1937, Tracy was considered the most popular singer in England while Bing Crosby was number two. With war on the horizon, Tracy took part in drills and air raid scares. He only left England when war was imminent and all Americans were ordered to leave.

Tracy returned to the United States and entered real estate with several properties in Philadelphia and Washington, D. C. He spent much of the following decades in real estate; ultimately he became a multi-millionaire. Tracy was married and divorced three times throughout his life, but remained close to his wife Blossom. He continued to sing for benefits; often he performed for free because he did not need the money. A thriving English based fan club welcomed him back on tour in the late 1960s. His singing career resurged in the United States after his recording of the song Pennies from Heaven was used the 1981 film of the same title. Tracy performed several concert dates and toured with the company of the play Social Security. He also had a part in the 1988 film Crossing Delancy.
In 1987 he received South Florida’s Carbonell award for Supporting Actor in Social Security in the roadshow category. In 1996 he was awarded the Ellis Island Medal of Honor. He also received a star on the Philadelphia walk of fame.

Arthur Tracy died of cardiac arrest on October 5, 1997 at the age of 98.
Scope and Content Note

The Arthur Tracy Papers include a significant amount of materials related to Tracy’s career as a singer on radio and on film. The bulk of the collection consists of sheet music, manuscripts, and music books owned by Tracy. Music styles are varied and include hymns, spirituals, folk songs, classical music, opera, Broadway, and popular music in a number of languages. The music dates from 1883 to 1976. Many items are annotated and stamped with ownership stamps; however, there is little evidence regarding which pieces were used in performance.

There are a significant number of posters and publicity materials related to Tracy’s concerts and successful film career in Great Britain. There are also a limited number of scripts from Tracy’s radio career and attempts to branch into television. The collection also contains correspondence from fans during his 1967 British tour as well as a complete run of the fan created magazine The Street Singer and Stars of the Thirties. There is little personal material. Of interest are the contents of the embossed folders of annotated music for Tracy’s concerts. Also of interest are the tour posters which detail the British variety circuit in the late 1930s.

Organization

The collection is organized into four series and five sub-series. They are:

Series I: Professional Files, ca. 1939-1967
Series II: Music, ca. 1883-1976; ca. 1993
  Sub-series 1 – Manuscripts, undated
  Sub-series 2 – Sheet Music, 1883-1968
  Sub-series 3 – Music Books, ca. 1926-1976
Series III: Photographs and Memorabilia, ca. 1920s-1987; 1993
Series IV: Oversized, ca. 1920s-1967; 1992
  Sub-series 1 – Drawing and Images, 1936-1992
  Sub-series 2 – Posters and Publicity, ca. 1920s-1939; 1967
Series Descriptions

Series I: Professional Files, ca. 1939-1967

Arrangement: Alphabetical.

This series contains correspondence, programs, and scripts detailing Arthur Tracy’s career as the Street Singer. Most of the correspondence is from fans during Tracy’s tour of Great Britain in the 1960s. The scripts provide information on Tracy’s radio career and later attempts to branch into television. The series also contains a complete run of the fan created magazine The Street Singer and Stars of the Thirties. There is little personal material.

Series II: Music, ca. 1883-1976; ca. 1993

This series is arranged into three sub-series and includes manuscripts, sheet music, and music books owned by Arthur Tracy. Music includes hymns, spirituals, folk songs, classical music, opera, Broadway, and popular music in a number of languages. Music dates from Ave Maria in 1883 to The Slipper and the Rose in 1976. Many of the pieces are annotated and stamped with ownership stamps. There is little specific indication of which music Tracy actually utilized in performance.

Sub-series 1 – Manuscripts, undated

Arrangement: Alphabetical.

This series contains manuscript scores and parts. Many manuscripts are annotated for performance usage. Music includes Chloe: Song of the Swamp, Marta, and Whistling Waltz.

Sub-series 2 – Published Music, 1883-1968

Arrangement: Alphabetical by title.

This series contains sheet music and orchestra parts of individual pieces. Many pieces are annotated and/or contain an Arthur Tracy ownership stamp. Music includes multiple versions of Lovely to Look At, Marta, Pennies from Heaven, Trees, and What Kind of Fool am I? that appear to have been utilized in performances.

Sub-series 3 – Music Books, ca. 1926-1976

1.5 box

This series contains published books of music selections. Many contain an Arthur Tracy ownership stamp. Books include music standards published in multiple volumes of Bourne Parade of Fabulous Songs and The Cavendish Music Books as well as popular music such as the music to A Chorus Line and The Slipper and the Rose.

Series III: Photographs and Memorabilia, ca. 1920s-1987; 1993 1 boxes

Arrangement: Alphabetical.

This series contains professional headshots and publicity photos that detail the span of Tracy’s career. Photographs include early professional headshots, unidentified cast photographs, a photograph with Eleanor Roosevelt, publicity photographs from his film career in Great Britain, and photographs of Tracy in the touring cast of Social Security. The series also contains Arthur Tracy’s performance folders. These black embossed folders held the music and parts Tracy utilized in performance. All music found within is now filed in Series II: Music.

Series IV: Oversized Images, ca. 1920s-1967; 1992 6 boxes

This series contains professional and amateur images of Arthur Tracy. Materials include posters and publicity from his career as well as drawings and images of Tracy himself.

Sub-series 1 – Drawing and Images, 1936-1992 1 box

Arrangement: Alphabetical by artist.

This series contains etching prints and drawings of Arthur Tracy.

Sub-series 2 – Posters and Publicity, ca. 1920s-1939; 1967 5 boxes

Arrangement: Alphabetical. Rolled posters arranged by original order due to fragility.

This series contains film publicity and posters primarily from Tracy’s career in Great Britain. There is a variety of publicity materials for the Tracy film Limelight. There are also a significant number of posters detailing Tracy’s years as a headliner on the British variety circuit. Posters detail the variety of performances and performers working in that era. There are also several posters from Tracy’s return to Great Britain in 1967. The series also contains several fragile 1920s Jewish theater posters in Hebrew.
