Creator History

Mischa Mischakoff (1895-1981), was a renowned violinist and concertmaster for Walter Damrosch,

Leopold Stokowski, and Arturo Toscanini. Mischakoff was born in Ukraine, 1895. After emigrating to the United States in 1922, he changed his surname from Fishburg to Mischakoff because their were too many other classical musicians named Fishburg.

His career as a violinist began as a child with a gold medal win at the St. Petersburg Conservatory in 1913. At the Conservatory, he studied with S. Korguyev. While residing in Europe, he had opportunities to perform including being chosen as the concertmaster of the Warsaw Philharmonic and Bolshoi Opera. In Europe, he used the stage name Michael Fibère.

Once in the United States, Mischakoff had to reestablish his career. After some initial performances, his career moved forward with The New York Symphony Society under Walter Damrosch (1924-1927); followed by the Philadelphia Orchestra under Leopold Stokowski (1927-1930); the Chicago Symphony Orchestra under Frederick Stock (1930-1937); the NBC Symphony Orchestra under Arturo Toscanini (1937-1952); the Detroit Symphony Orchestra under Paul Paray and Sixten Ehrling (1952-1968); and in later years guest concertmaster with the Baltimore Symphony Orchestra. Mischakoff led for many years the Mischakoff String Quartet.

During the summer (1925-1965), Mischakoff served as the concertmaster and soloist at the Chautauqua Symphony in Chautauqua, New York. His teaching credentials include being on the faculty of the Juilliard School (1941-1952), and from 1952, Wayne State University in Detroit. As a concert violinist, he owned an exceptional collection of violins including four Stradivari.

Mischakoff died in Michigan in 1981. He was survived by his wife Hortense, two sons and a daughter.
