Creator History

Geraldine Louise Wilson (1931-1986), was an early childhood specialist, poet, writer and civil rights activist. Born in Philadelphia, Wilson was the daughter of Herbert and Hilda Wilson. She received a bachelor of science, specializing in Early Childhood and Elementary Education from Temple University in 1955; and a master's from New York University's School of Education in 1968.

After graduation, Wilson taught in the South Philadelphia public school systems. In 1964, she left Philadelphia to join the Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee (SNCC) located in the Mississippi Delta and Georgia and was a co-planner of the Mississippi Institute for Early Childhood Education.

In 1966, she relocated to New York City to work as an instructor and consultant in early childhood education at New York University and several other local colleges. From 1973 to 1979, she was the project director of the New York City Head Start Regional Training Office located at New York University. During her tenure as project director, Wilson would continue consultant work with other Head Start programs outside of New York City.

The Head Start Program is a government program that provides early childhood education, nutrition and other essential needs for low-income children. In this position, she headed the Oral Tradition Project that wrote the manual "'Tell It!' a Manual on Storytelling and Oral Tradition in Early Childhood Settings," (1978). Upon leaving Head Start, Wilson became a full-time consultant for educational institutions.

Wilson died in New York City in 1986.

Scope and Content Note

The Geraldine Wilson papers, dating from 1950s to 1986, document the career of Geraldine Wilson (1931-1986), early childhood specialist, poet, writer and civil rights activist.

The collection holds: personal and family papers; correspondence; writings; poetry; speeches; bibliographies; curricula; conference notes; training manuals; seminar and workshop agendas; project proposals; and research.

The collection documents Wilson's career as a teacher, consultant, contributing speaker and writer on educational issues, and a poet. The files demonstrate her work as an advocate for raising cultural awareness and improving the education of African-American children as well as promoting storytelling as a traditional form of educating youth.

The files for the grant-funded Oral Tradition Project at the New York City Head Start Regional Training Office document the development of the importance of oral history tradition as an art form to support the "intellectual-cognitive, aesthetic, cultural development of young children." The correspondence, memorandums, reports and notes indicate that the goals would include training some parents and Head Start staff as storytellers, and to present the art of storytelling in a positive way.

Of historical interest are the Civil Rights Movement files retained by Wilson. This small section shows the dangers activists faced in the 1960s and, her involvement with the Mississippi Freedom Democratic Party (MFDP). The files include correspondence, memorandums, newspaper clippings and locally printed publications such as the Mississippi Freedom Democratic Party, and the Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee. Related to the Civil Rights Movement, is Wilson's work to improve the education of African-American children in Mississippi as demonstrated in the Mississippi Education files.

The subject files reflect Wilson's work as an educator and her interests. Topics include African-American culture, early childhood education, children's literature, multi-cultural education, and storytelling. The files may include Wilson's correspondence and research notes; and articles and publications that she collected.

The Audio and Moving Images are mostly recorded educational events, seminars and workshops. This material is restricted pending digitization.

Arrangement: The collection is arranged in ten groups: Personal Papers, Oral Tradition Story-Telling, Writings, Head Start Program, Civil Rights, Curriculum, Black Child Development Institute, Subject Files, Consultant's Files, and Audio and Moving Images.
